

The Export Machine Found Its Off Switch

2026-06-16 / 00:24:09

“When a government can close a model overnight, foreign buyers stop treating American AI as a product and start treating it as permission.”

— Jonas Vale, today's narration

Watch on YouTube

Jonas Vale follows the day when U.S. AI export policy collided with export controls, France moved away from Palantir, xAI power became a national-security claim, OpenAI financials surfaced, and agents moved deeper into real-world action.

- Axios on the U.S. AI export strategy and export controls
- Axios on Anthropic, Fable, and cybersecurity leaders
- The Guardian on France, Palantir, and ChapsVision
- TechCrunch on xAI's gas turbines and the DOJ filing
- Ed Zitron on reported OpenAI financials
- OpenAI on deployment simulation research
- The 2026 AI Index report on arXiv
- NVIDIA, CMU, and UC Berkeley's ENPIRE project
- Agent Fair Bench on arXiv
- Bruce Schneier in The Guardian on Anthropic Fable

CHAPTERS

- 00:00:04 The Export Program Found Its Off Switch
- 00:04:10 France Reads The Procurement Fine Print
- 00:08:17 The Data Center Becomes A Security Claim
- 00:12:00 OpenAI Reports Like A Capital Project
- 00:16:16 OpenAI Tests The Crowd Before Release
- 00:20:09 Agents Leave The Screen